IB schools or international schools can provide students with just the kind of global education we need now. The alternative education model goes a long way to prepare children for the future. Here are 6 myths about IB schools debunked!

Listen to this article now

As an aspirational India looks to contribute in every aspect of the global economy and society, we are confronted with a pertinent question that begs an urgent answer. How do we prepare our children to meet these aspirations?

It has been becoming abundantly clear over the last few decades that our current education system is woefully inadequate to do this job.
system is woefully inadequate to do this job.

I myself am a product of our rote- and exam-centric, chalk-and-talk education. It was only when I became interested in creating an institution that could deliver quality learning that I realised the inadequacies of the education I had received.

A good education must provide children with a well-informed mind, develop their creative and critical faculties, and help them to become empathetic and caring individuals who are committed global citizens.

These attributes also form the bedrock upon which they can build a higher education and career suited to their talents and dispositions.

How IB schools provide an alternate education model that really works

Clearly, we need alternate models of education. When I talk to educators around the country, they share my concern that our examination-obsessed system is robbing kids of their creativity or the ability to be themselves.

It's not that India has not experimented with models of education. Innovations implemented by Sri Aurobindo and Jiddu Krishnamurthy continue to inspire generations of educators and learners but their experiments remained small in scale.

While some progressive boards like the Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) are bringing about multiple, much-needed reforms, the pace of these reforms will have to be slow because of the incredible diversity of schools they need to manage.

Given these realities, one of the low hanging fruits is in adopting International Boards that are more focused on 21st century skills.

By incorporating the International Baccalaureate (IB) Diploma Programme (DP) and International General Certificate of Secondary Education (IGCSE) curricula into their pedagogy, international schools are offering Indian children an opportunity to join the larger student global community as equals.

When IB was first adopted in India in 1976, there were very few takers but we have seen a 10-fold increase in the last 15 years. Now we have over 700 schools across the country offering an international programme at one or the other level.

In fact, India ranks second in the number of international schools with China following behind. The most prevalent programme is Cambridge Assessment International Education (CAIE), followed by IB. However, Delhi NCR does not form a significant percentage of these 700 schools.

6 myths about IB schools that you need to understand

Let us examine some of the myths about international schools that are clouding our judgment:

Myth 1: International schools are too new and untested

Not really. The first IB school was set up in India in 1976, and Cambridge has been in India for over 50 years. Top schools in India such as Woodstock, American Schools, British Schools and Kodaikanal International Schools have offered the international curriculum for decades.

Now even the Doon School offers international programmes to students. India has definitely witnessed a spurt in the popularity of international schools over the last decade. Globally too, there has been a proliferation of international schools.

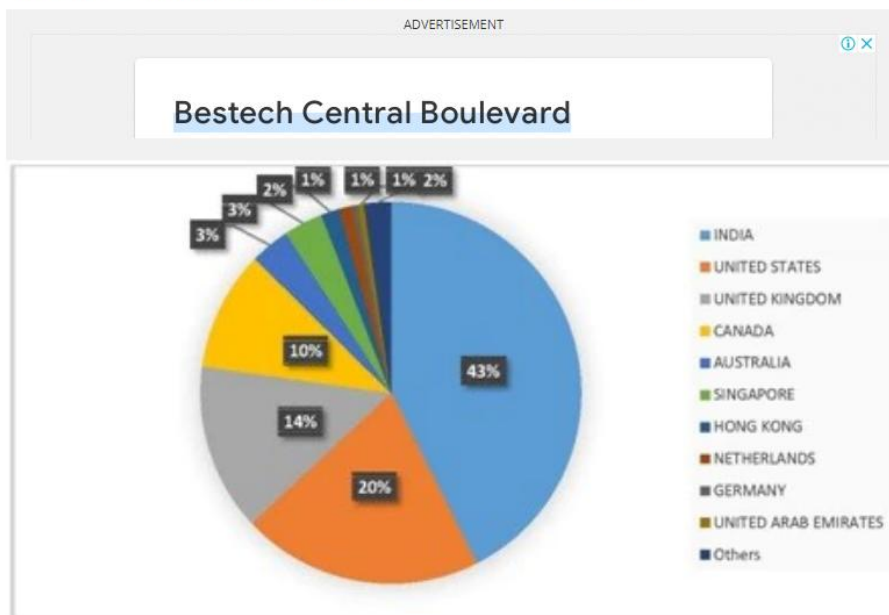

In fact, Delhi and Gurugram lag far behind other cities in India in terms of international schools. Let's take a look at the CAIE schools in India:

State-wise		City-wise
Maharashtra	139	Mumbai	100
Tamil Nadu	78	Bengaluru	51
Karnataka	54	Delhi-NCR	40
Telangana	35	Hyderabad	39
Gujarat	26	Chennai	33
Haryana	22	Pune	20
Uttar Pradesh	21	Kolkata	11
Punjab	18
Rajasthan	18
West Bengal	17
Delhi	11

Myth 2: International school students are not accepted by Indian universities

Contrary to popular perception, 43 per cent of IB school students get admission in Indian universities, as the figure on college destinations of IB students, shows:

Some of the top universities in India such as Shiv Nadar, Jindal and Ashoka prefer international programme students.
